The principle of trading is a very simple concept although we, as humans, find it quite complicated, especially those who have a hard time comprehending selling short. Trading is just a matter of interested parties coming together and speculating whether the price of a specific commodity is going to go up or down. It is that simple.

Trading will probably test your emotional strength and psyche. It will be the ultimate financial, emotional, and intellectual challenge you will ever encounter. Fear, doubt, complacency, greed, anxiety, excitement, false pride—all can interfere with rational and intellectual thoughts. It is those feelings that create the jungle, and you may need help to overcome that jungle of emotion. Conquer those feelings and you may find the holy grail of trading: a confident winning attitude.

Technical analysis is the study of a market's price data, which is created by the emotions of the participants. Price reflects the current or anticipated value of a market from a supply and demand perspective. Price is the true and absolute reflection of value, as perceived by the various market participants.
